Case No.: 2:21-cv-0273-JAD-NJK

Order Remanding Case to State Court

[ECF Nos. 31, 50]

13 Nevada’s 2008 housing crash kindled thousands of quiet-title lawsuits between the 14 homeowner associations that foreclosed on homes when the homeowner stopped paying 15 assessments, the banks that held the first-trust deeds on those homes, and the investors who 16 snapped those homes up at bargain-basement prices. Having consumed the state and federal 17 courts for more than half a decade now, those cases have all but burned out. But a phoenix has 18 risen from their embers: the banks now sue the title insurers that issued policies when the 19 mortgages were originated for failing to defend them in those quiet-title suits and cover their 20 losses.

21 This removed action is one of those coverage suits. Though U.S. Bank filed it in state
22 court against forum and non-forum defendants, Defendant Chicago Title Insurance Company 23 removed this case before any defendant, including itself, had been served with process and despite a forum defendant whose existence should have precluded removal. The propriety of this practice—termed “snap removal”—is an issue that has divided the courts. The bank challenges this practice in its motion for remand. Because I find that the removal here was improper, I grant the bank’s motion for remand.

Discussion

I. Legal standard

28 U.S.C. § 1441(a) authorizes defendants to remove to federal court “any civil action brought in a State court of which the [U.S. District Courts] have original jurisdiction” But “[f]ederal courts are courts of limited jurisdiction.”¹ So defendants seeking removal jurisdiction “always have the burden of establishing that removal is proper.”² This is a heavy burden to carry because there is a “strong presumption against removal jurisdiction[,]” the removal statute is “strictly construe[d] against removal jurisdiction[,]” and “[f]ederal jurisdiction must be rejected if there is any doubt as to the right of removal in the first instance.”³

II. Analysis

Chicago Title Insurance Company (Chicago Title) removed this case on diversity-jurisdiction grounds.⁴ Congress has created a limitation to diversity-based removal jurisdiction. 28 U.S.C. § 1441(b)(2) provides that “[a] civil action otherwise removable solely on the basis of [diversity jurisdiction] may not be removed if any of the parties in interest properly joined and served as defendants is a citizen of the State in which such action is brought.” This limitation is called the forum-defendant rule, which is a “procedural, or non-jurisdictional, rule.”⁵

In an effort to evade the forum-defendant rule, Chicago Title removed this case before any defendant had been served with process. The bank moves for remand, arguing that the snap-removal practice violates the forum-defendant rule, which applies here because one of the named defendants, Ticor Title of Nevada, Inc., is a Nevada citizen.⁶ Chicago Title argues in response that removing before any defendant has been served to defeat the forum-defendant rule is a permissible practice and, regardless, the forum-defendant rule does not apply because Ticor is a fraudulently joined defendant.⁷ I begin with the issue of fraudulent joinder.

A. Ticor is not a fraudulently joined defendant.

Fraudulent joinder can be established two ways: “(1) actual fraud in the pleading of jurisdictional facts, or (2) inability of the plaintiff to establish a cause of action against the non-diverse party in state court.”⁸ Chicago Title relies on the second way, arguing that the bank sued Ticor only to defeat removal on diversity grounds and cannot state a claim against it. “Fraudulent joinder is established the second way if a defendant shows that an individual joined in the action cannot be liable on any theory.”⁹ “But if there is a possibility that a state court would find that the complaint states a cause of action against any of the resident defendants, the federal court must find that the joinder was proper and remand the case to the state court.”¹⁰ Examining whether the fraudulent-joinder doctrine applies should not, therefore, entail a “searching inquiry into the merits of the plaintiff’s case” against the forum defendant.¹¹ This is

1 because “the test for fraudulent joinder and the test for failure to state a claim under Rule
2 12(b)(6) are not equivalent.”¹²

3 Chicago Title argues that the bank’s breach-of-contract claim against Ticor fails from the 4 start because Ticor wasn’t a party to the policy agreement and had no responsibility for the 5 alleged breach.¹³ The threshold question, however, is not the ultimate success of the bank’s
6 claim but rather the mere possibility that the state court would find that the cause of action had 7 been stated.¹⁴ That possibility exists here because the bank alleges that “Chicago Title and Ticor
8 Nevada entered into a contractual relationship with” U.S. Bank Trustee’s predecessor in interest
9 in the form of the title-insurance policy,¹⁵ Ticor had responsibility “for providing coverage”
10 under that policy¹⁶ and issued that policy,¹⁷ and “the Policy and each of the Policy
11 endorsements” are signed by Ticor.¹⁸ The bank further alleges that Chicago Title and Fidelity 12 breached the policy and, “because Ticor Nevada entered into a contractual relationship with U.S.
13 Bank Trustee’s predecessor in interest to procure coverage of the priority of the Deed of Trust
14 over the HOA’s lien—to the extent coverage is not afforded under the Policy, Ticor is an alter
15 ego of Fidelity and Chicago Title as a result of its failure to procure coverage as requested.”¹⁹

1 Based on this record and Nevada’s lenient notice-pleading standard,²⁰ Chicago Title has 2 not established that there is no possibility that a Nevada state court would find that this complaint
 3 states a claim against Ticor. Because Chicago Title has not shown that forum defendant Ticor
 4 was fraudulently joined, § 1441(b)(2) applies and I proceed to determine if Chicago Title’s snap 5 removal was proper.

6 B. Chicago Title’s snap removal was improper under 28 U.S.C. § 1441(b)(2).

7 Chicago Title argues that snap removal is a permissible practice and a valid means to 8 avoid the forum-defendant rule. It points out that “every appellate jurist to consider the issue”
 9 has concluded that the plain language of § 1441(b)(2) is unambiguous and permits snap
 10 removal²¹ but acknowledges that the Ninth Circuit has not yet done so.²² Recognizing that I—11 and all judges in this district (except for one) to have considered its removals in dozens of nearly 12 identical suits—have repeatedly held that this practice is impermissible, Chicago Title urges me 13 to reconsider and reverse my view.²³ The bank, on the other hand, contends that the 14 interpretation that Chicago Title and its authorities offer cuts against the statute’s language and 15 purpose of preserving the plaintiff’s choice of a state forum when at least one defendant is a 16 citizen of that state.²⁴ The bank adds that each of the authorities that Chicago Title cites is

1 materially distinguishable and that nearly all judges in this district have overwhelmingly rebuffed
2 Chicago Title’s snap-removal tactics.²⁵

3 When interpreting federal statutes, “the starting point in discerning congressional intent is 4 the existing statutory text”²⁶ “It is well established that when the statute’s language is plain,
5 the sole function of the courts—at least where the disposition required by the text is not absurd—
6 is to enforce it according to its terms.”²⁷ Courts are required to “presume that the legislature says
7 in a statute what it means and means in a statute what it says there.”²⁸

8 The appellate courts that have determined that § 1441(b)(2)’s “plain language allows 9 snap removal” before any defendant has been served did so by focusing on the “properly joined 10 and served” phrase in the statute.²⁹ But not all courts agree with that interpretation. The 11 “[d]istrict courts are split as to whether snap removals are appropriate,” and “[t]here is ongoing 12 debate on whether there is a trend in favor or against” the practice.³⁰ Heavily cited in the 13 against-it camp is U.S. District Judge Woodlock’s decision in Gentile v. Biogen Idec, Inc., 14 concluding that “the plain language of section 1441(b) requires at least one defendant to have

1 been served before removal can be effected.”³¹ Judge Woodlock reached that conclusion by 2 grammatically parsing the statute in its current and historical forms.³² The statute now precludes
 3 removal “‘if any of the parties in interest properly joined and served as defendants’ is a forum
 4 defendant.”³³ “‘Any[]’ . . . means ‘one or more indiscriminately from all those of a kind[,]’”³⁴
 5 and “[i]nherent in the definition is some number of the ‘kind’ from which the ‘one or more’ can 6 be drawn.”³⁵ “Thus the lack of a party properly joined and served . . . means that . . . [a] basic 7 assumption embedded in the statute—that a party in interest had been served prior to removal—
 8 has not been met.”³⁶ This interpretation bars snap removals.

9 Chicago Title insists that Gentile should be rejected in favor of the circuit rulings that 10 approve of this tactic.³⁷ It also argues that the First Circuit’s 2015 decision in Novak v. Bank of 11 *New York Mellon Trust*³⁸ demonstrates that this 2013 decision by Judge Woodlock, a judge
 12 within the First Circuit, was wrongly decided.³⁹ But Novak addressed only the general question 13 of “whether a defendant may seek to remove a state-court action to federal court before being 14 formally served”; it did not grapple with the more specific issue of a non-forum defendant’s snap 15 removal in a diversity case with a forum codefendant.⁴⁰ And after carefully considering the

1 parties’ authorities, I agree with the vast majority of the judges in this district that Judge
 2 Woodlock’s interpretation “is the most cogent.”⁴¹ Not only does it make grammatical sense, it is 3 the interpretation most true to other canons of construction, the statute’s purpose, and legislative 4 intent.⁴²

5 As Judge Woodlock reasoned, “[t]he removal power, and by extension the forum[-]
 6 defendant rule, is founded on the basic premise behind diversity jurisdiction itself”— 7 “protect[ing] non-forum litigants from possible state court bias in favor of forum-state
 8 litigants.”⁴³ But forum defendants do not suffer this bias and therefore do not need protection
 9 from it. And the presence of a forum defendant presumably mitigates concerns of state-court 10 bias toward the plaintiff. So the forum-defendant “rule provides some measure of protection for 11 a plaintiff’s choice of forum” in certain circumstances.⁴⁴ “[W]hen the overarching concerns
 12 about local bias against the defendant” are absent, the rule allows “a plaintiff to move for a 13 remand of the case to the state court”⁴⁵

Courts agree that § 1441(b)'s legislative history does not explain why "properly joined and served" was added to the statute.⁴⁶ "Supreme Court jurisprudence at the time of the 1948 revision . . . suggests"⁴⁷ that this language was added to prevent the gamesmanship of a plaintiff "blocking removal by joining as a defendant a resident party against whom it does not intend to proceed, and whom it does not even serve."⁴⁸ But with the advent of electronic dockets, sophisticated, monied, or hyper-vigilant defendants are monitoring court filings and removing before any defendant has been served, with the goal of eluding the forum-defendant rule. Congress would not have intended to prevent plaintiffs' removal-defeating games by creating a means for defendants to leapfrog over the forum-defendant rule.

The removal statute's purpose is better fostered by precluding removal until at least one defendant has been served. That way "plaintiffs legitimately seeking to join a forum defendant face the modest burden of serving that defendant before any others."⁴⁹ A plaintiff who "serves a non-forum defendant before serving a forum" one "has effectively chosen to waive an objection to removal by a nimble non-forum defendant who thereafter removes the case" before it can be served.⁵⁰ And the non-forum defendant can still argue that the forum defendant was fraudulently joined.⁵¹ This interpretation is faithful to the removal statute's entire purpose and consistent with its plain language, and I adopt it. Applying this interpretation, I conclude that Chicago
